Hanse 301

The interior is like many other boats made of mahogany. Mahogany belongs to the hardwood species, known for being water-repellent and resistant to decay. It has an attractive wood grain and holds wood polish and varnish well.

Saloon Description

In the saloon the settee berths are comfortable as seats and would make good sea berths, although lee cloths are not provided as standard. Headroom at the aft end of the saloon is 5ft 11 in, increasing to 6ft 2in under the main hatch.

Galley info

Apart from a couple of niggles, the spacious galley would be easy to use at sea. Stowage in this area is more than adequate, with a deep shelf at the back of the galley, a very large locker with three sets of shelves under the sink, a coolbox/fridge and a locker under the cooker for pots and pans. Although there is lots of worktop space, the fiddles were a disappointment, as they are too low to keep most items in place at sea

Main Cabin

The 301 has a comfortable forecabin which has good stowage, including two full-height lockers, two deep shelves which run the full length of the berth and under-berth stowage. With a width of a full 3ft, the standing/changing area is larger than that seen on many larger boats, although headroom in this cabin is limited to 5ft 5 in.

Head

The head, equipped with a manual wc and a nice sink, including a waste tank which was fitted as Spanish rules says.

FULL SPECIFICATION

Cockpit Description

The cockpit is a good size - its around 7ft Sin long - but is not too wide to be able to brace yourself firmly when the boat's heeled. Both cockpit seats and coamings are comfortable on ali points of sail.

Helm position

Two things are outstanding about the Hanse 301 - a very low price and excellent sailing qualities. It's great fun to sail and gives ali the benefits of a new boat at a price that compares favourably with many secondhand vessels of the same len
