Jeanneau Sun Odyssey 54

The 54 is focused around family life spent on deck and in the water, as it should be on a luxury performance cruiser of this caliber. The 54 also carries her maximum beam (16'1"/4.92 m) nearly all the way to the transom, creating a generously-sized cockpit, over a third of the boat's length, ideal for socializing, on-water activities, and all to enjoy under sail. She has been well-designed for her role as a cruiser with a rig that is set up for easy handling shorthanded.

Saloon Description

Not surprisingly, this smart design is also apparent belowdecks—especially in the saloon, which on our test boat was equipped with a large in-line galley to port that employed the back of a centerline bench facing the very large dining table as a brace point. The beauty of this configuration is that you can feel totally comfortable preparing a meal at sea, while still being able to slide out the way if something hot spills in your direction

Galley info

We think this is a clever location for a galley as it keeps the heat out of the salon, is out of the way so there is no problem for crew to move fore and aft. The chef will like the food prep counters, three-burner stove top, the large refrigerator and microwave.

Main Cabin

The owner's stateroom up in the bow was nothing less than palatial, with an en suite head and shower, and easy access to the berth from both sides. I especially liked the small desk to port and the cozy little lounge beside the hull window to starboard. The side-by-side hatches overhead admitted scads of natural light.

Head

Accessing from the saloon, the head is shared with the aft starboard cabin. With it

Cockpit Description

It recognizes that not everyone in the cockpit is expected to help work the vessel. It acknowledges the reality that all of us like to bring guests along, including children, those new to sailing, and perhaps even the owners' parents or grandparents.

Helm position

Continuing all the way aft, the twin helms are literally planted in the port and starboard stern corners. While some helmspersons may find these locations overly exposed, the visibility to windward and leeward under sail and the ability to keep an eye on sail trim is phenomenal.

RECENT WORKS & IMPROVEMENTS

Antifouling, folding prop anodes, velocidad painted... same oficial engineer is carlinga " Dolce Vitta" since new.
